Delaware's Northwest Neighborhood plans "Free-Cycle" event for July 16

Delaware's Northwest Neighborhood Association is planning a "Free-Cycle" event for July 16. Residents are invited to place items they no longer want or use in their front yards for others to take, as well as mingle among their neighbors in search of any items they might find useful.

The event, co-sponsored by Sustainable Delaware is commonly done throughout many other communities. The Northwest Neighborhood is bordered by Euclid Avenue on the west, the Olentangy River on the East, William Street on the South and Pennsylvania Avenue on the North.

There are no costs involved, according to association president Benny Shoults. "The whole idea of this event is to re-cycle items that may not be useful to you any longer, kind of a second life to perfectly good stuff. A lot of times people hold garage sales and are left with a bunch of stuff they end up giving away anyways. Some residents might even want to hold a garage sale the weekend before, and what doesn't sell, they can free-cycle."

The event is scheduled from 9-3 on July 16th. Residents who wish to participate can get more details and download to print a "Free-Cycle" sign online to place in their yard near free items at www.delawareanna.org. Residents who do not have access the internet can contact Shoults at (614) 885-3424. For more information on Sustainable Delaware and their activities, go to www.sustainabledelawareohio.org.
